Degenerate Tendencies of a Hat.
"Did you know that a derby hat left on the shelves two or three years would assume a funnier shape than a fable baseball player?" said a Libson street hatter a few days ago. "Well, it's so here is a hat. It has been on the shelf three years. Look at it. Do you suppose I have bought such a beautiful hat? No man ever designed it. Look at the brim. It isn't wider than the back of your jack-knife. The fact is that the hat is made under pressure and heat. Left to themselves they distort along the lines of pressure. Sometimes the brim crawls up into the crown, and sometimes the crown evaporates into the brims. I've seen an old-fashioned, flat-topped, wide-brimmed hat so much warped by the heat that in one year it became a better than a pancake and so funny that it would break up a revolving door."

A PERSISTENT AILMENT.
Stomach Trouble in Children and Its Cause.
In children the intestinal canal is relatively of greater length than in adults, while its muscular tissue is proportionately less. For this and other reasons an unsuitable diet quickly causes irregularities of the bowels in children.
It is safe to say that whenever children suffer from constipation the food which they receive is ill-suited to their stomachs if not actually harmful to them.
Infants who are brought up artificially, on cows' milk, are peculiarly subject to constipation. The milk is often found to curd in lumpy flakes, which pass through the intestines undigested. In such cases the milk should be given in a more diluted form, with perhaps the addition of a little lime water.
Cream and butter are to be recommended on porridge and cornmeal. Oatmeal gruels should form part of the dietary of older children, who should also be encouraged to drink as much water as they crave.
When constipation is found to be persistent, the child's diet should be regulated with a view to counteracting it. For children of three years and older, bread made of unbaked flour, bread and molasses—not sirup, stewed prunes, orange juice, honey and bread, olive oil and olives, codliver oil, peaches, fresh vegetables, baked apples and gingerbread should be occasionally parts of the bill of fare.
A judicious administration of this class of foods will avoid all necessity for castor oil, rhubarb and other household remedies, which are often given to a harmful extent without the family doctor's orders or knowledge.
Abdominal massage is a useful method of overcoming the effects of constipation in infants. It should be performed three or four times a day, very gently and with a warm hand. The best time for it is while the infant is feeding, when the abdominal wall is soft and relaxed.
A little dry salt, followed by a glass of water, is often resorted to by a child, and is beneficial in cases of constipation.
A sufficiency of fresh air and regular exercise, when combined with a proper dietary, will rarely fail to avert the threatening evil of chronic constipation.

OCTOGENARIAN'S HORSE STORY
The Age of the Author Commands Respect for the Tale.
"This is not a fish story," the story teller remarked. "It's a horse story with a schooner attached. I heard it coming in on a train from Connecticut and as the man that told it was at least 80 years old and had no reason for telling anything except the truth at that time of life I suppose it is true. We happened to be seated together, and, after talking about one thing and another something induced him to ask: 'Did you ever hear of horses almost capsizing a schooner?' Of course I never had heard anything like that, and I replied accordingly.
'When I was a young man,' he continued, 'a schooner came to the town where I lived for a load of horses that had been picked up for the city. The skipper rigged up a lot of stalls on deck and at high tide the horses were driven on board. It was late in the afternoon before the last one was barreled in, and, being about feeding time, the crew opened a bundle of hay and fed the horses, first on one side and then on the other. Then the strangest thing happened. The horses were hungry and they were not long in sticking their heads into the feed. Those that had been fed first began to eat first, of course.
'In a few minutes the schooner began to roll from side to side, and the crew ran about like wild men. They didn't know what to do, and the horses kept on eating. It was this way, you see: Every time the horses on one side of the vessel had their heads down for hay the vessel rolled on the other side, as it happened, held their heads up with manching, and vice versa. The center of gravity changed every time a horse moved, and as the horses were eating quickly the upward and downward motions affected the vessel as much as they thought she would capsize. Queer, wasn't it? 'What did they do?' I was obliged to ask. 'I don't know,' the old gentleman replied. 'I had to leave them, but I heard they thought of taking away the feed.'"

PROSPERITY IS HERE.

Sorry It Occurred.
To the editor of the Register:
The following article appeared in the "Register" this morning, under the above heading:
A young man connected with a certain newspaper in the city in walking up the street yesterday spied a female acquaintance, and accelerating his steps soon overtook her and asked if he might walk with her. "Excuse me, sir," she said freezingly, "but I saw you in that black and tan parade last night, and I don't think I would feel honored by your company," and so the young man is sorry it ever occurred.
The writer doubts very seriously the authenticity of the above, for he reposes too much confidence in the intelligence of the young ladies of Paducah to believe they would allow such a contemptible prejudice to control their actions, and we are surprised that the "Register" would continue its advocacy of its platform of prejudice in such manner.
Another cause for comment is, that after parading one Christian (colored) and also one Tanner (colored) of local fame under Democratic auspices that the "Register" should consider disreputable what less than a month ago it applauded and fostered.
It may also be news to some people that an attempt was made to bribe some of these same "black and tans" to parade in the silver demonstration as a colored Bryan club.
In the language of the Bostonian we are moved to remark:
"That people who in crystal palaces reside, Should not cast missiles with so much pride."
Patriotism and not prejudice determined the political courses of the Clays, the Murrys, the Breckinridges, the Burnhams, the Durhams, the Williamsons and a host of others, through whose veins coursed the truest and bluest of Kentucky blood, and neither the ravings of a "Bryan" nor the Japanese gods erected on the altars of Democracy could attract them from their purposes.
Do you know that those "black and tans" were offered money, and lots of it to organize a Bryan club in this town?
Will the "Register" explain what disposition would have been made of the "black and tans" had this "scheme" succeeded?
Be it said to the credit and honor of the colored man, that he resisted every attempt at corruption and patriotically remained true to his convictions.
The writer does not believe there is a decent young lady in Paducah who would be guilty of such foolishness.
Christianity and education have not been instituted in vain, and such extreme prejudice now finds no lodgment in the hearts and minds of intelligent and patriotic people.

POPOCRACY.
The campaign of 1896 leaves in the vocabulary of American politics a new word—Popocracy. That the word has come to stay is evident from the fact that immediately upon its appearance it was by common consent accepted as a most suitable name for the conglomeration of political theories that burst upon the people in the early part of the year.
Popocrat startled the American people upon his entrance into the arena, by two remarkable feats. He stole the name of the party and the political platform of the Populist Democratic leaders in the year 1892.

THE FEELING OF THE AMERICANS.
The feeling of the Americans, who favored a sound financial system, have over the result of the election is quite lucidly expressed by the language of a financier who said "We have been on the brink of the precipice, but were saved from the fall." The shiver the people felt has passed and their senses have returned. They have now turned to business in one thing beyond a doubt. The party leaders who compelled the adoption of a clear, ringing sound money plank in the platform were the safest advisers for the party interests as well as for the country. Cowardice and cringing duplicity never pay, even in politics.
